

Issue Update

The National Flood Insurance Program (NFIP) was created by Congress in 1968 to provide flood coverage in the absence of a private market. Even with the development of a private flood market in recent years, the NFIP remains the main source of primary flood coverage in the United States, with nearly 4.6 million policies providing almost $1.3 trillion in coverage for 22,700 communities across 56 states and jurisdictions. Despite the program's importance to the housing market, Congress has not passed a long-term reauthorization of the program since 2012. For more than a decade, the program has operated under short-term extensions and has lapsed several times.

Why It Matters

As flooding continues to be the most common and costly natural disaster in the United States, it is imperative that Congress ultimately pass a longer-term reauthorization of the NFIP. As part of the reauthorization, Congress should enact reforms to address the program's sustainability, affordability, and availability, including providing lenders and servicers with the tools needed to better serve their customers.

Although the prudential regulatory agencies took a positive step in May 2022 by publishing updated Interagency Q&As on Flood Insurance, significant areas of confusion persist. The Agencies must commit to providing the banking industry with clear, comprehensive, and consistent guidance using the notice-and-comment process to ensure they remain current and responsive to industry needs. Prior to the 2022 update, the previous updates occurred in 2011. An 11-year gap between updates is unacceptable, especially when the penalties for non-compliance are strictly enforced.

The lack of guidance is further compounded by inconsistent supervision and enforcement of the FDPA's mandatory purchase requirements, underscoring the critical need for the Agencies to provide clear and uniform guidance. Additionally, supervision and enforcement are not evenly applied across all mortgage lenders and servicers. Non-depository lenders now make the majority of mortgages originated today, yet these lenders are not subject to federal supervision for compliance with the mandatory purchase requirement.

Recommended Action Items

Tell Congress to pass a longer-term reauthorization of the NFIP and work to enact reforms. It is critical that NFIP reauthorization is timely and long-term, and reforms are needed to address sustainability, affordability, and availability to ensure American communities and homeowners have continued access to affordable, reliable flood insurance coverage.

Urge Congress to require the prudential regulators to provide regular updates to the Interagency Q&As on Flood Insurance using the notice-and-comment process. The absence of adequate guidance regarding compliance with the mandatory purchase obligation of the Flood Disaster Protection Act continues to pose significant challenges for banks of all sizes.

Urge your member of Congress to consider directing banking regulators to adopt a similar approach to flood risk as they do with other types of hazard risk, focusing on practical, risk-based assessments rather than procedural compliance. Flood compliance is unduly complicated and burdensome, especially for small banks.
